POLICE TACTICS “Tricks of the Trade”

1. Knock and Talks

Police show up at your front door without a search warrant and trick you into consenting to a search. Generally, the police have information of illegal activities, but not enough for a search warrant. The police trick you by telling you they are there for a morals violation (stolen property) and that they need to look around for the stuff. The police are really there for another purpose (usually drugs) and use your consent to fulfill that purpose without having to get a search warrant, generally resulting in an arrest.

2. Tandem Driving

Police will observe cars traveling together on the interstate to see if they are out-of-state rentals from states known to be source states for drugs. Police will then find some sort of traffic violation as a pre-text to simultaneously stop both cars, wherein they subsequently try and gain consent to search. Police will use deliberate tactics such as not asking for your proof of insurance until after they have had time to write you a warning so that they can prolong the stop for additional investigation beyond that which is usually permissible to gain consent to search or find probable cause to make an arrest.

3. Terry Pat-Downs

Police will tell you that they believe you have a gun and will ask you for permission to pat your person to determine if you have a gun. The real reason for patting you down is to feel if you might have drugs or other contraband in your pockets. Once they feel the contraband they will ask you what it is. The police are hoping that you will tell them that it is drugs so that they will have probable cause to arrest you.

4. Patrol Car Recordings

Police use both outside and inside video and audio recordings to gather incriminating statements against you, especially during the time in which two potential suspects are placed in the back of a squad car. The police are encouraging suspects to talk about the crime, while secretly recording every statement being made.

The DOs and DON'Ts after Arrest:

X DON'T

1. Don't talk to anyone about your case.
2. Don't discuss your case over the phone while in jail as all these conversations are recorded and used by the prosecutor.
3. Don't agree to talk to police for any reason.
4. Don't give permission to search anything.
5. Don't consent to DNA swaps or drug testing without a search warrant.
6. Don't agree to work with police without first consulting an attorney.

✓ DO

1. Do take pictures of the scene.
2. Do take pictures of any injuries.
3. Do take a drug test if clean (for drug arrests).
4. Do write down the names and telephone numbers of all witnesses.
5. Do get written statements from witnesses.
6. Do contact an attorney immediately.

Know Your Constitutional Rights

ALWAYS REMAIN SILENT

You can never talk your way out of a situation with the police, but you can always talk your way into an arrest. Seek counsel before saying anything to anybody, including your friends.

NEVER SIGN ANYTHING

Police officers solve the majority of crimes only after someone has talked. Do not agree to sign any waiver of your right to remain silent until you have consulted with counsel.

DON'T BELIEVE THE POLICE

Police officers will make open-ended promises of leniency to convince you to talk. Don't believe them as only the prosecutor has the discretion to show leniency. Seek legal advice immediately.

REFUSE ALL SEARCHES

Never let the police search your home, car or person without a search warrant. Demand to see the search warrant. Police officers play upon your ignorance of the law to gain consent to search. Don't be caught off guard, call an attorney first.

ALWAYS ASK FOR AN ATTORNEY!

You have a right to counsel during questioning or a police line-up. Never give up this right! Never!

OBSERVE AND PRESERVE

Never become confrontational with police. Simply, observe police conduct and preserve the badge number, as well as, the names, addresses and telephone numbers of potential witnesses to be given to your attorney at a later date.

THE BEST DEFENSE IS TO ASSERT YOUR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IMMEDIATELY. DON'T TALK TO ANYBODY UNLESS IT IS YOUR ATTORNEY.
